From the Baltimore American The Sound Dues Question. The most recent advices from abroad give evidence that the position of this country in relation to the Sound Dues, and the crisis which an adherence to that position will in a few months bring about, if the difficulty be not in the meantime adjusted, is attracting much attention from the Governments and publicists of Europe. Two evidences of this attention were included in the advices by the Canada. One being the well accredited rumor that Russia had accepted the position of mediator between the United States and Denmark, and the other the discussion of the subject by the Constituttonnel, the semi-official journal of the French government. The willingness of Russia to become a mediator between Denmark and this country may be attributed to very obvious causes, the policy of which is easily discernible. By whose crimes had brought them to punishment, and assuming that position she would increase the attachment of Denmark to her cause, and throw at least one obstacle in the way of the formation of a country which it is her object to make Western Europe belive she sustains, and the supposed existence many of the prisons. of which is the overflowing drop in the London

The attention which the Paris Constitutional gives the subject is supposed to be instigated by the French Government and its views are received as in some respects developing the position taken by the French Cabinet. The Constitutionel is of opinion that the crisis provoked by the refusal of the United States to pay the Dues after the first of April next cannot be otherwise put an end to than by a general Congress of all the nations interested in the matter, and that England, which occupies the first rank in the commercial world, and France, which is placed at the head of the political world, would be to evade and not to solve the difficulty. That, although Denmark G. MILLIGAN, Proprietor, respectfully informs the cannot have thought of taking a dicision which would be resolutely opposed by any one of the powers largely interested in the commerce of the Baltic, it appears from what has transpired of its resolutions that nothing more is contemplated for the present than a temporary and partial solution. But if it be true that I enmark has addressed itself solely to the powers bordering on the Baltic-Russia, Prussia, Sweden, Mecklenberg and Lubeck-and that she expects by their assistance alone to terminate her difference with the United States, this question will, the Coustitutionel thinks, become more embroiled than ever. According to the information received by this journal, the Danish Government has sought to make the payment of the Sound dues more palatable by offering to remove an inconvenience much complained of, namely, SHOES and HATS; CROCKERY and EARTHEN the payment of them at the entry of the straits, where the anchorage is perilous, and to remove the customhouse to the inner ports. The Constitutional then advocates the capitalization scheme as the one most calculated to arrange the present difficulty to universal satisfaction. "The plan would be, in our opinion, to capitalize and purchase the rights of the Sound The abuses and difficulties which now abound would disappear The justice advanced by Denmark of the claim which custom and a possession from time immemorial have conferred on her would be admitted, whilst a tax which oppresses commerce would cease to exist."

It corcludes: "France has comparatively but a secondary inter. slab over his grave: est in the question. Its importations to the Baltic have never been very considerable. France, therefore, can the better take part in the coming diplomatic struggle with that calm good feeling which she has always entertained towards Denmark, reserving to herself to protect the interests of that power, should lish Bacon .- Americans visiting England are often

Howard, the Philanthropist. In the town of Cardington, in England, once lived a very good man named John Howard. He had a large house and fine farm, and hired many servants. His wife was a kind and gentle lady, and made all around her happy. But suddenly the good Mrs. Howard died, and her busband was left sad and lonely, for his only child was still a very small boy, not old enough to comfort his sorrowing father.

Mr. Howard's home had lost its brightness, and he now resolved to follow the example of our Savior, who, while on earth, went about doing good. Having placed his son under the care of a good woman, he began to visit all the prisons in the neighborhood. No one thought much about the condition of those Mr. Howard was surprised and grieved by the dreadful situation in which he found many fellow-beings.

A heavy grief fell upon the last days of this noble man. His only son had grown to be a young man, but instead of being a comfort to his worn and weary father, he became his bitterest trial. While Mr. Howard was attending upon several sick sailors in the port of Venice, he received a letter from a friend at home, bringing sad news -- his son was deranged. It was a terrible disappointment to his hopes, but he said. "Shall I receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall I not receive evil 2" He hastened home as soon as possible, but the account was too true, and he was forced to place his son in a lunatic asylum. Again he turned to the continent .-For the seventh and last time he bade good-by to old England. He had stood for the last time by the grave of his beloved wife; he had looked for the last time on the grave of his son. The winter of 1790 was very cold and stormy.-Mr. Howard spent several weeks in visiting the sick soldiers who were stationed at Cherson, in the south-

One day he was hastily requested to visit a young lady who was dangerously ill; at first he refused to go, saying he was only a physician to the poor, who could not obtain any one else : but her friends urged him so much, that he at last consented. Having administered what medicines he thought best, he left, directing them to send for him if she grew better, adding, that if she grew worse, which he feared would be the case, it would be of no use. The young lady grew better, and ber friends wrote to Mr. Howard to come as 'quickly as possible. By some mistake the letter was delayed eight days. When Mr. Howard saw how long it had been delayed on its way, he feared it was too late. No carriage was to be procured, so he mounted an old horse and rode twenty-four miles in a cold, drenching rain. To his great grief, he found his patient very feeble, and on the next day she died. The cold, wet ride, and the sorrow he felt on the lady's death, together with his recent affliction, proved too much for his strength. After a short sickness he died, far from kindred and country, yet not without friends; for his goodness had made him beloved by all. He was buried in the place he had chosen, and the inscription he had himself written was placed on the plain marble " JOHN HOWARD,
